Adobe Photoshop on the left, Adobe Photoshop Elements on the right Pros If you're just looking for a normal editor, and don't need to use Photoshop for other reasons, Photoshop Elements might be your answer. It's simpler to use and cheaper than Photoshop but the features are pretty much the same. Pros: Basic tools and image editing Lets you make simple edits in a more simplified interface Most editing options are similar to those in Photoshop Can be much cheaper to buy, and don't need a lot of storage space No registration required to download. You can download Photoshop Elements for free here. Adobe Photoshop is overkill for image editing If you're an avid Photoshop user, you might not want to take the plunge. Photoshop is generally more complicated to use than Photoshop Elements. It is also very expensive (often, when you buy a cheap version, it may not have the same features). Whichever version you use, you are going to have the chance of dealing with only 2 or 3 large files. That means you have to either save them in a cloud storage service, or you have to delete or backup your files as soon as you're done editing it. With Photoshop Elements, you can use it in the cloud using the 'cloud' layer mode. This mode enables you to save your images and documents in the cloud at any time for later use. Keep in mind that cloud storage of any kind is very precarious. I recently experienced some outages of my cloud storage service and that's when I decided to try out Photoshop Elements. Because I was saving my files in the cloud, I was stranded without a way to access them. I felt the pain. You should not put all your eggs in one basket. Cons It is much more expensive than Photoshop Elements and Photoshop It is much more complicated to use It is much slower to use Depending on which version you use, you may not be able to use some of the free features such as enhancing parts of the image and other features that require registration Finding a friend to help As you can see, there are a lot of downsides to using Photoshop. It can be really complicated for someone who is new to editing images. It is also a lot of hassle for you to use Photoshop if you don 388ed7b0c7

The present invention is directed to a search engine that allows a user to select from a list of items. The items are sorted based on several criteria. Known search engines include the well-known Yahoo!® (and Google® (search engines. For example, Yahoo!® allows a user to enter a search criteria, such as a keyword, which is used to locate web pages containing the keyword. When the search criteria is a keyword, the search engine returns a list of web pages which contain the entered keyword. In this list, the web pages are ranked according to the number of times the keyword appears within the page. The ranking of each web page is based on the total number of "hits" for the keyword. A hit is a text string which contains the keyword. Typically, a web page is assigned a score based on the hits of a keyword within the web page. The score is calculated by adding the hit count for the keyword and dividing by the total number of hits in the web page. The web pages on a search result list are sorted in descending order based on the scores. The order of the list is typically the order of importance to a user. The user can scroll through the list to find the web page of interest. In addition to the list of web pages sorted in descending order based on score, a Google® search returns a list of web pages that are searched for the search criteria. This list is sorted in descending order based on the number of times the search criteria has been entered for the web pages. As with the Yahoo!® search, the Google® search is a search by key-word and web pages are ranked according to the hits of the keywords. The Google® search, however, also returns a list of "related" web pages which are determined by finding all other web pages that point to the web page that is returned. The related web pages are listed in a list that is sorted in descending order based on a weighting of the related web pages. The weight is determined by the number of inlinks to the returned web page. The search engines are often complicated to use. A user typically has to enter multiple search criteria to obtain useful search results. The user must enter the multiple search criteria using the search criteria boxes provided for the search engine. The user may not always enter all of the correct search criteria. The search engine will not be able to find web pages that
