Here are the top 11 uses of “HyperMotion Technology” in FIFA 22: 1. Super-Accurate Shooting The implementation of “HyperMotion Technology” allows for a level of realism never before possible in the franchise. It is the core element of all gameplay elements, including shooting, passing and ball control. The accuracy of shooting is first tested for distances before the player makes the choice to kick or pass the ball. The more complex the action, the more the player is tested. In one-on-one situations, the player is tested with more intricate ball movements and it is more important for the player to make his or her move as accurate as possible. More Skilled Throwers One of the best things about “HyperMotion Technology” is the increased control the players have on their throws. With the new physics engine in place, players will be able to make throws with a greater degree of accuracy. This makes the game easier to control, especially when dealing with the semi-unpredictable nature of the pitch. Many of the goals and the huge majority of the action are concentrated in the lower areas of the pitch, meaning players need to get to their targets in time. So the addition of “HyperMotion Technology” improves the speed at which the action takes place. The top-down view on the pitch facilitates the need for speed.
