Dynamics of tumor adhesion on magnetic nanoparticles. The adhesion of nanoparticles to tumor cells is an important step in the targeting of drug delivery carriers. In this work, we use an atomic force microscope to directly visualize the dynamic interactions between magnetic nanoparticles and living cancer cells. We show that even after prolonged incubation periods (up to 24 h), the magnetic nanoparticles preferentially attach to cells that have larger cell size. The mechanism of this selective adhesion is shown to be driven by the difference in the cell wall elasticity between small cells with a softer cell wall and large cells with a
