After you make a final print, another use for an image is to send it to someone via email or a drop box. This may be an important file to your client, so you should create the file in a format that the recipient can open if needed. I think there's a thing called a Gekicil or something, and in Korean the word "injlil" means "holy book". At any rate, if you're not too sure, I've heard the Korean media using the word "national book", and there is an entry for "injlil" in the wikipedia English page for Korean in reference to it. The document listed as the document authorized by the KCC, I believe, is titled the National Sacred Book of the South Korean Bible Society. This is a translation of the Korean Book, I think (not sure though) I've never met anyone who said "국립 성경" and I've never seen it written, but yeah. I can see the English dictionaries listing it as "national book", it's just not a usual word in our language.Q: how to filter code by language for eclipse Suppose i have this file: [{ "addItem": { "text": "Item 1", "value": 1 }, "numItems": 3 }, { "addItem": { "text": "Item 2", "value": 2 }, "numItems": 3 }] i want to filter it by language and i want to get this output [{ "addItem": { "text": "Item 1", "value": 1 }, "numItems": 3 }, { "
