This can happen when you take a picture of a person with a flash. Sometimes, you'd like to remove the red eye without using a photo editing app. Here's how to do it. Launch your photo editing app on your computer. Open the images that you'd like to edit. Go to the Edit menu and select Red Eye Removal from the Red Eye Removal menu. You can access the Red Eye Removal menu by pressing the Alt key twice. Check the OK option. You can choose whether the removed red eye should be fixed by blending or simply be gone. Cu(I)-catalyzed B(3,5)-arylation of arenes with N-aryl-2-nitroaldimines and pyridinium salts. A B(3,5)-arylation protocol for the synthesis of 1,2,3,5-tetrasubstituted arenes from readily available arenes and aryl halides was developed. The reaction proceeded via a Cu(I)-catalyzed arylation of the 2-nitroaldimine with aryl halides in the presence of an aryl pyridinium salt. I came across a DeviantArt forum for a series of illustrations done by a group of French illustrators called "Les Princes des Eaux". I love a lot of the illustrations, but I have to admit that I was really impressed by a particular drawing by J. R. Schaal which you can see in this DeviantArt gallery. I personally have never heard of J. R. Schaal but, when I looked him up, I learned a lot about him and his career. He is a French illustrator that has won a number of awards and was a guest at a number of festivals in his country. It seems that there have been quite a number of exhibitions of his work throughout Europe and that he is a real fan of surrealism. The style of his art is very precise, detailed and distinctive. I would describe it as realistic but, the elements that you would normally consider to be part of realistic art aren't always so easy to see. When I first saw his work I was a little confused about what I was seeing. The images were very clearly drawn but, most often there was no reference to the real world. I thought for sure that it was all done in the mind of the artist. Finally, I put my confused mind to rest and realized that it was totally possible that he was creating all of the elements he was using even though they may not be recognizable to me. Some of the images look like they were painted onto old walls. That's because much of J. R. Schaal's work was inspired by a love of the unique colors and textures of old buildings and streets. I really love that detail. It makes it that much more enjoyable to look at his work. I love the way that he goes all out and creates a surreal story within his scenes. The imagination that he puts into his work is really amazing

This year I won't be running the big Continental Divide Trail (CDT) thru-hike this summer but I will be going for a shorter thru-hike beginning in mid-June. My current plan is to hike to Denali and then back to Fairbanks by mid-July. Any recommendations on where to stay along the route (town or campsite) or specific areas of interest? An email message with a reset link will be sent to your email address. Thanks, Jeff Comment Your best bet for a definite hotel in the Denali area is to take the Inside Passage route. Once you pick up a newspaper at the cruise ship landing, you'll start to see a lot of ads for basic cruise ship offerings. Most of these cruise ships serve a route that terminates in Ketchikan, and that city is a good point to pick up accommodations. Another way to pick up accommodations in Ketchikan is to check to see if the cruise ship companies have a hotel/motel promotion to coincide with the arrival of the cruise ship. They will have a flyer with a particular cabin number that is usually discounted. Then, once you get to Ketchikan, the local hostess (AKA 'cruise ship agent') will have a printed list of local accommodations. The list is usually on large pieces of paper that are displayed in the lobby. If there is no package available (usually this is a shorter time period than the cruise line promotions), the hostess will advise you to call the 'front desk' to make your reservation. Once you get to the Ketchikan area,
