Q: Advanced Select Component showing null value I have the following component and I'm getting null value when i'm setting selected value to an empty string. export interface IStructurePage { title: string; path: string; id?: string; name?: string; } ID name Path component structure A: This is due to how *ngIf function toggles the value. When you remove it, the value of IStructurePage is set to {} if you don't use the [hidden] decorator: This way, the condition (structure === {}) is never evaluated and the component is not rerendered. You need to use a custom pipe to check for IStructurePage value: import { a synonym is a word that means the same as another word. If there is more than one synonym for a given word, it is a polysemic word. For example, the word'mosquito' is a monosemic word because there is only one meaning of'mosquito' and one synonym for the word, 'fly'. However, there are polysemic words that need an orthographic explanation and this can be explained using the methodology of the Semantic Priming Experiment. There are three main word types in the English language - morphemes, prefixes and postfixes. These three word types are indicative of the three main parts of the English language - Syntax, Semantics and Pragmatics. All of these word types are basically three different ways of phrasing a given word in the English language, each of these word types serves a purpose to help a speaker express a thought through language, and they also serve a purpose to an interpreter because a person is only able to understand one thought at a time. Morphemes are the smallest of the three types, morphemes tend to be spoken or written with a vowel in them. These morpheme sounds can be directly translated into phonemes. For example, if 'd' is a vowel sound then the word 'dog' has three different phonemes contained in the word - 'd', 'o' and 'g'. Prefixes are the most common type of word in the English language. For example, 'before' means 'in front of'. Postfixes are another very common type of word in the English language and they follow the same format as prefixes. For example, 'after' means 'behind'. For example, if the word'mosquito' was made into syllables it would look like this: m-o-s-k-i-t-o. If a person was to pronounce it they would say'moskee'. This type of pronunciation is used for a polysemic word, which means that there are more than one meaning for the word. People are more familiar with morphemes than they are with prefixes and postfixes, but both prefixes and postfixes can be used to make a polysemic word. The reason why prefixes and postfixes are used for polysemic words is that they let a person to think of two different meanings at the same time, instead of thinking of
