Seasonal variations in body composition of F. sciuropterus (Crustacea, Decapoda) in the Potomac River, Maryland. We measured seasonal variations in body size and other body components in the crab Fissostethus sciuropterus, a species common in the Potomac River, Maryland. All adults exhibited significant seasonal changes in wet weight and protein content of dorsal carapace, although the size of the female (and possibly male) gonad did not change throughout the study. This pattern is similar to that observed in the freshwater lobster, Panopea zelandica, but differs from that shown by the predatory marine hermit crab, Pagurus bernhardus. As with other crustaceans, seasonal variation in the size of the gonad in F. sciuropterus is probably caused by modulation of secondary growth.{ "name": "Fancy", "version": "1.5.7", "summary": "Read HTML, CSS and JS from string or file", "description": "A simple React UI Component set of utilities for reading html, css and javascript.
