“One of the biggest challenges to developing this type of technology is ensuring accurate data collection and the best possible replications of real-life situations,” said Peter Sage, Head of Player Experience at DICE. “We wanted to provide fans with a more authentic and truly immersive football experience by giving them the chance to directly control players using their own bodies.” The technology also tracks player performance and progress, which can then be used to improve the game. Players will be able to use a series of animations and real-time feedback in-game to influence the style of attack, and then track how they perform with each of the other players on the pitch. The introducer for "HyperMotion Technology" is an Arsenal fan named Sam, who has been a professional football player for 16 years. Sam gives us his first impressions and thoughts on how it feels to use the new player control feature in FIFA 22. For more information about "HyperMotion Technology" in FIFA 22, watch the FIFA.com video.

Fesoterodine is superior to onabotulinumtoxinA in reducing postvoid residual urine volume and improving patient-perceived bother related to overactive bladder: a prospective, randomized, double-blind, phase 3 study. To compare the efficacy and tolerability of the antimuscarinic agent fesoterodine with onabotulinumtoxinA in patients with detrusor overactivity (DO) and overactive bladder (OAB). This was a randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled, phase 3 trial. After completing a 2-week washout, patients were randomized to receive 4 weeks of treatment with fesoterodine 4 mg once daily (subsequently 2 mg once daily from week 5), onabotulinumtoxinA 100 U (Botox; Allergan, Irvine, Calif), or placebo. The primary efficacy parameter was the percent change in postvoid residual urine volume (PVR) from baseline to the end of treatment. Secondary parameters were the change in OAB questionnaire, the change in bladder diary, and the proportion of patients who completed treatment and met the per-protocol definition of success (more than 50% reduction in PVR and greater than or equal to 50% reduction in daily urinary frequency). In patients treated with fesoterodine, there was a significant reduction in mean PVR at the end of treatment (least square mean [LSM])
