Q: How to deploy a Flex library to a server I have just created a basic Flex 4 library and I was wondering how to deploy it to a server so that any client who uses it can download it (similar to any Flash.SWF). I know I can copy it up to a server but I was wondering if there is a way to do it so that it is visible to anyone who uses it. Any help would be much appreciated. A: You can publish it to the Adobe Flash Player libraries, which you could then host on your own site. You could then reference it in the ActionScript file (right click on the library, and select "Insert Code"). If this is not an option, or if you need to maintain the library yourself, then you can publish it to your own site and link to it in the ActionScript file. You need to have a Class (and others) created in your library to describe the available objects. It should look something like this:

Q: Are Python strings from C not immutable? When I run the following code: "a" + "a" I get a new string like this: 'aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa' But if I change the line to: "a" + ("a" + "a") I get 'a' + ('aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa' + 'a') And I can't get this to cast correctly. Why is this? >>> "a" + ("a" + "a") 'a' + ('aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa' + 'a') A: Looks like "a"+("a"+"a") has type str, not tuple. The line "a" + ("a" + "a") is evaluated to str(str(str("a"))) + str("a" + str("a")) str(str(str("a"))) is the function str(str(str("a"))), which returns str('aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa'), str("a" + str("a")) is the concatenation of str("a") and str("a"), which is 'aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa'. So the result of the function str(str(str("a"))) + str("a" + str("a")) + str("a") is 'aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa' + 'aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa' + 'a' which is the string 'aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa'. As you can see, the first argument to str is a string, the second and the third are integers, so it returns a str. If you convert it to tuple, you get ('aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa' + 'aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa' + 'a').
