How Photoshop Works Let's explore how Photoshop works and how to use it to your advantage. Transparency Photoshop supports layer-based editing that allows an image to be assembled and modified by placing one layer on top of another. Each layer can be anything from a photo, a drawing, a painting, scanned line art, or even a color swatch or template. Similar to Windows file structures, Photoshop saves a copy of the top layer as a new file (except for raster image formats like JPG, which don't support transparency) when you save a file. Each layer is saved as a separate file and all of the layers remain separate for each saved file. "The bottom layer is always the current layer. It represents the active state, and each additional layer is a copy of the previous layer." If you're looking for something specific, Photoshop allows you to search for similar images in the same directory or in the hard drive. It will find all similar photos or drawings found in the same directory or connected to the hard drive from within this directory. You can even further manipulate the similar photos by opening them into Photoshop from within the folder. You can check the concept of each layer as well, view the current file, or history, or undo last action on each layer. Collaboration Photoshop also uses collaboration. You can place a new layer, link an existing file, or even link a file from another program and add it to Photoshop. You can even draw on the canvas and have the newly drawn image saved as a new layer on the canvas. "This allows you to create layers by linking and un-linking them in and out of a document. Editing Using layer-based editing, you can create a masked area, hide it, or even fill that masked area by adjusting the opacity of the layer. In addition, you can enhance the layer by applying filter effects, making the effects dependent on the layer. You can even add text to the layer or remove it. "The white layer on top is the current layer. To view the image that is painted on the entire layer, we need to turn off the layer as a mask and then activate the layer to view the entire thing." You can also change the transparency of individual pixels on the layer. Resizing and Cropping Photoshop not only allows you to resize the canvas to any

Q: using geolocation in a cross domain I'd like to do a simple use of javascript geolocation, but I am getting an error: Uncaught Error: Blocked a frame with origin "" from accessing a cross-origin frame. (index):251 This works well locally, but the error pops up in IE7, IE8, and the latest FF. I'm using this in an ASP.NET MVC 3 application. I'm wondering if anyone has been able to use geolocation in a cross domain scenario. I'd appreciate any ideas or solutions you can offer. A: I got a good solution from Plixus: So, I've posted the answer in case anyone else needs it. Q: Butterknife's OnClick method not called I am trying to implement OnClick event inside my Fragment. Since I have implemented InjectLazyViewMethod to avoid re-injection. So, basically I have implemented only one method to initialize ButterKnife. I get an error that tells me to have a OnClickListener called before super.onViewCreated() but when I look the call stack, it shows nothing before. How can I initialize ButterKnife, and be sure that it is called? Here is my OnInjectViewMethod @Override public void injectLazyView() { try { View v = View.inflate(context, R.layout.fragment_compose, null); ButterKnife.inject(this, v); } catch (RuntimeException e) { throw e; } } And my ViewHolder public static class ComposerViewHolder { @InjectView(R.id.compose_title) TextView compose_title; @InjectView(R.id.compose_body) TextView compose_body; @InjectView(R.id.compose_body_send_message
