Motion capture technology has been used in previous FIFA titles. However, no previous game used all 22 players in a match, which covered the full spectrum of player actions. This new “hyper” technology provides more control and simulation with a better visual experience when viewing the game play. Only players that are designated as “masters” for the RealPlayer Motion System, and only their motion capture data is used. This data is applied to the 22 real-life players by combining a stochastic user-generated model with a fitness-based model. The stochastic model approximates movement patterns of player-specific game actions through a weighting system that includes all of the following: Initial direction, Change of direction, Acceleration and Deceleration, and Height change. The fitness-based model defines movements of the individual players by using the results of a predictive algorithm that finds effective accelerations of a complete football match based on player positions, lineup, and possession. The FIFA Football Operations Division and the FIFA Soccer Business Unit (FSB) worked closely with developer EA Sports to expand the game to cater to the needs of 21st century players. With new build tools and the ability to dramatically increase the number of players per team, any squad of players can be simulated in real-time. Players can choose to play with the game default 11 players per team, or play with 16, or 20, or 23. The player likeness modeling and 3D animation technology also improved the realism of the game, as well as the player and game physics. Read Also: FIFA 21 announced as 'most popular' FIFA game ever EA SPORTS' CAREER mode added many new improvements. Players can build a career in the game or continue where they left off last year in FIFA 21. Trophies and the ability to travel are now in PLAYER X. A new structure to the game will allow players to play with their favorite player from the top 11 teams in FIFA, or the top 4 managers. There's also expanded tactics: there are now more than 200 different tactics available for use in the game. The game also features a new manager created by EA SPORTS, Claudio Pizarro. Claudio comes to the game in a new position and with a new personality, from Spain. The player likeness animation technology and controls were also improved.
