U.S. C&C Sees Future in Hydrogen as Fuel The U.S. Commercial Building Commission (USC&C) and the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers (IEEE) presented the concept behind the USC&C 2009 Commercial Building Standard at the IEEE Applied Power Electronics Conference this week in Boston. The standards promote the use of hydrogen as a fuel and water as a thermal medium for efficient power generation in commercial buildings and power plants. "Some institutions are promoting research and development (R&D) to help achieve this goal," said Randall Turchick, president and chief executive officer of the USC&C. "Our industry needs to take action and provide the incentive to jump-start this effort. "Our standard is more than a technical paper," Turchick said, emphasizing the economic benefits of the standards. "The building and society will benefit from an increased amount of affordable, reliable power." The USC&C 2009 commercial building standard is the first major guide for effective hydrogen use in commercial buildings. The IEEE standard on the use of hydrogen as a fuel and water as a thermal medium was developed to incorporate practical and cost-effective approaches for increasing the energy efficiency and reducing the environmental impact of commercial building heat pumps and microturbines. "Hydrogen will not be a new technology," said Turchick, "but it is a catalyst to bring it to the next level of technology." Since the first mention of hydrogen as a fuel in the U.S. in 1979, Turchick said, "We have been talking about hydrogen and think like a commercial building, not like an electric power grid."

The rise is largely fueled by the price increasing from $5,251 at the beginning of last week to a new high near $6,600. Billionaire investor and bitcoin advocate Mike Novogratz said he has $100 million invested in his Galaxy Digital bitcoin exchange. Novogratz said he received a $75 million investment from a Chinese bitcoin "whale" last year but declined to name the investor. "We are in a very, very different place than we were two years ago," Novogratz said. "So, I'm incredibly bullish." On CoinDesk's five-day survey, three of the 13 respondents said they were bullish on Bitcoin.

The data was collected Jan. 20-25, two days before the sudden rise in
