President Donald Trump warned Russian President Vladimir Putin on Thursday that "you gotta get back to Russia" after accusing his counterpart of failing to keep his word on the denuclearization of North Korea. Trump's remarks occurred during a joint press conference with NATO Secretary General Jens Stoltenberg after the two concluded a two-day summit meeting in London. Told that he hadn't gotten any guarantees on nuclear disarmament from Putin, Trump replied, "I don't believe he was specific. "But I really don't believe that he is going to go back to a place of having them. As far as I am concerned, that is unacceptable. That is not going to happen," he said. Read more: Trump also said North Korean leader Kim Jong Un said he is "going to start a nuclear (attack)" on the US, but that the "talks are going very well." He added: "I believe that it is a long process. We're going to be seeing something fairly quickly. But the fact is that he is a leader. You have to give him credit." But a senior administration official later told reporters in an off-camera briefing that "the president and the secretary general really didn't talk about" nuclear weapons, despite the president's comments. Those comments came just days after Trump said in Singapore that North Korea would be "wasting their time" if they didn't agree to a denuclearization deal. "We're not going to be discussing that now," Trump said. "We'll be discussing that in the future." Asked about those comments on Thursday, Trump said that Pyongyang had signed off on the plans to denuclearize. "I think they've made a lot of progress. I think they have gotten back on track," he said. "It's a process. It's a process. I know you guys like to make it like a quick process. It's not a quick process. It's going to be done properly," he added. "I think they have a lot of respect for the United States now, for what we've done."5 AM: TO HAVE 5 AM: TO HAVE THEIR EYES, THEIR EYES THEY CAN TAKE THEIR
