"FIFA 19's gameplay engine was the most sophisticated ever in the history of the series. But we knew that to keep fans excited, we needed to go even further," said Oliver Harb, Creative Director on FIFA. "This year's game marks the biggest step forward in football authenticity and gameplay ever seen in the series. With player movements now powered by real life data, and Real Player Motion Technology, we're able to deliver a richer and more realistic experience than ever before." In

FIFA 22, players will be awarded points based on their real-life statistics during a match, with the initial release featuring over 1,600 player ratings, with game-play being improved by over 40 hours of gameplay across the past and upcoming FIFA World Cups and other Real-Player events. The new Player Impact Engine analyzes in-game player behaviour, providing statistics which will allow you to further adjust individual player attributes, and automatically bring out their best and worst traits. For example, by increasing a player's aggression rating, FIFA 22 will make them more likely to make tackles or challenge for aerial balls, while lowering their endurance will make them more likely to last the 90 minutes. FIFA 22 new cards include: 40 cards from the Collection of Personality New Championship awards A new Tribute Award for Fifa 2017 Specialists and Pioneers Player Cards New cards will also be awarded for competitive player traits and will carry transfer market ratings. For a full list of new cards, visit the FUT Pack 2 page on FIFA.com This year, FIFA Ultimate Team will feature 12 pure rookies in the game, with new players becoming available every two weeks. FIFA Ultimate Team is one of the most-played modes on FIFA 19, with fans already spending over 500 million hours building their collections of players, with over 300 million of those hours being played on FIFA 19 Ultimate Edition. The player transfers market has been rebuilt, with players now being allocated to the relevant clubs based on where they play. The player distribution is now based on the probability of a club playing a high number of games, but for the first time ever, the distribution will be based on how accurately players are rated, with values adjusted according to a player's experience. In FIFA 22, player cards and players themselves will also be tracked by Clubs, allowing you to follow how a player develops within a Club over time.
