Contents show] Photoshop Essentials Edit Light and Contrast Edit Lightness One of the most basic tasks in editing digital images is to adjust the white balance of an image. This is done by choosing a preset in a preset panel on the right side of the screen. For example, the image on the left has a cooler temperature than the image on the right, which is warmer. In order to adjust the white balance of a picture, go to the right side of the screen, and click on the drop-down menu of an available white balance preset. The next screen will list the available White Balance presets. Click the preset you wish to use and a drop-down menu will appear. Next, you need to move the Lightness slider until the most natural white balance is achieved. You can also manually set a white balance, by dragging a white mark over the right side of the screen. You will see the white balance change as you move the white mark.

Brightness Another basic editing task for beginners is to increase or decrease the brightness of an image. To do this, first go to the right side of the screen, and then click on the histogram (the graph with a light gray background) to activate the tool. If you'd like the brightness of an image to be decreased, move the histogram downwards. Conversely, if you'd like the brightness to be increased, move the histogram upwards. If you are unsure whether you should increase or decrease the brightness of an image, simply play around with it and see if the brightness is reduced more easily than increased.

Contrast Contrast refers to the difference between the brightest color and the darkest color within an image. A high contrast image is one with a larger range of colors, whereas a low contrast image has a small range of colors. For example, in the following image, the black hair has a smaller range of colors than the vibrant reds and yellows. Therefore, the black hair is a low contrast image, and the brighter colors are high contrast. However, the image on the left has very high contrast, whereas the image on the right has a smaller range of colors, resulting in a low contrast image. To achieve high contrast, move the Contrast slider towards the right. Conversely, to achieve low contrast, move the Contrast slider towards the left. One of the most
