The data in FIFA is translated into unique skills where dribbling, heading, shooting, passing, and movement are dynamically responsive. These skills come from how the player moves through the world. For example, a player that cuts inside an opponent will score a "glance" when they touch the ball as the action responds and alters the player's directional velocity. Each player creates their own set of skills that come from the player's unique physicality and movement patterns in the game. "We've been hearing for a long time how good it feels when players practice in virtual world with the help of motion capture data," said FIFA Live Services Director, William Renton. "We're here today to confirm that gamers will have an incredible sense of reality in FIFA 22, as the technology allows players to feel and play like they do in real life. " Using unique real-world data from players like Neymar, Luis Suarez and others, FIFA 22 uses the data directly to create gameplay mechanics that are unique to the world of FIFA. The blend of physical and movement data, when used with detailed animations, are a unique indicator of how an athlete plays. There are over 400 animations specifically created to move the player like how they play in the real world. These animations can be used for all aspects of gameplay, including dribbling, heading, passing, shooting and tackling. FIFA FUT begins with the story of one year in the life of Alex Hunter. A professional footballer in his mid-twenties whose career is currently on a downward trend. As it stands, Alex Hunter is out of contract in three months time and has been told by his agent he will receive no lucrative new deal from any club. When his club, Norbert Farsud, have the chance to sign him, his team are also facing a cup final and a possible relegation to the lower leagues. Alex is determined to fight his way back to the top and showcase his talent to his high-flyers, but first there's the final to win. He has to find a balance between playing good football and ensuring his team qualify for the cup final. "The dream of being a professional footballer was my inspiration to create this game," said Tim Fincher, Chief Creative Officer of EA SPORTS. "It's a story driven FIFA game with unique characters all inspired by the 22 real-life players we've met and
