The IfO poll for public broadcaster ZDF showed a record 91% of Germans approve of the way she is running the country. The chancellor is now seen as the most popular politician in the world, surpassing US President Donald Trump's approval rating of 87%, according to the US-based Pew Research Center. Mrs Merkel also tops the list of world leaders people across Europe trust most. More than 50% of French people said they approved of the way their president, Emmanuel Macron, was doing his job, according to the survey, compared to just 24% of Germans who felt the same way about Mrs Merkel. On the other hand, the German chancellor saw her approval rating drop 4% in the past month, the survey showed. Before last month's general election, the leader had enjoyed a 91% approval rating, according to ZDF. It is now the highest ever recorded. Why has Angela Merkel's approval rating so increased? After years in power and amid a string of scandals and growing frustrations, Mrs Merkel's approval ratings fell to below 70% in early 2019. But since the election, she has seen a return to form, with the support of powerful regional election wins in three states, making her the strongest candidate to lead Germany in a fourth term. There has also been a gradual decline in the fortunes of her main challenger, Martin Schulz, who was the SPD party's presidential nominee. Mr Schulz was booed on his final speech on Tuesday as he announced his support for Mrs Merkel - though he had previously called the chancellor "unique". What do Germans feel about the election? Regardless of party or political stance, the survey found that Germans were overwhelmingly unhappy with the outcome of last month's general election. Many said they felt both disappointed that their vote did not result in a different outcome - and that they felt the country had not ended its political crisis. Those most likely to feel dissatisfied were people with low incomes. But there was strong support for the result from all over the political spectrum. Those aged between 18 and 24 were particularly supportive. The poll was conducted between 22 and 24 September. In total, 1,668 people aged between 16 and 75 were surveyed./

The prognostic value of DNA methylation in cancer: a systematic review and meta-analysis. Previous studies have suggested that aberrant DNA methylation in cancer tissues is a biomarker of prognosis. However, the prognostic value of DNA methylation remains controversial. We conducted a meta-analysis of the literature to provide more reliable and comprehensive evidence for the prognostic value of DNA methylation in cancer. PubMed, Web of Science, Embase, and Cochrane databases were systematically searched. Studies were eligible if they included information on DNA methylation as a prognostic marker in cancer patients. Fixed or random-effects models were used to calculate pooled hazard ratios (HRs) and 95% confidence intervals (95% CIs) for overall survival. Six studies involving a total of 822 patients were included in this meta-analysis. DNA hypermethylation of the RASSF1A promoter gene (HR = 2.23, 95% CI = 1.15-4.34, P = 0.018) and hypermethylation of the RB1 and/or CDKN2A/p16 loci (HR = 2.86, 95% CI = 1.53-5.35, P
