This enables teams to more easily adapt to the unique playing style of their opponents. During a video interview with FIFA.com, EA's Fifa 22 Crack Head of Product Jay Lee presented how the technology unlocks gameplay action and how it benefits the ball movement in FIFA, making for a more realistic and dynamic experience. FIFA.com: The demo of FIFA 22 included in the latest Official Xbox Magazine highlighted how "HyperMotion Technology" makes the ball behave more realistically with increased speed and better ball control. Can you go over more specifically how this technology benefits the way the ball moves? Jay Lee: There are a number of specific applications for the 'HyperMotion' experience. We are exposing the player to a greater range of ball movement, for example. The player is able to see exactly where the ball is going in relation to the player's body. The player will see the ball zip to a number of different directions before engaging a tackle. In FIFA 16 the ball would come to a stop from one direction then accelerate through the air at the player as a pass. With 'HyperMotion Technology' the ball moves at a high speed and continues moving straight ahead until the player takes control of it. We think this gives a better representation of a live football match as it's usually a constant motion that continues all the time. In general, the player can see the ball in front of them and, as long as he is controlling the player and ball, the player is aware that the ball is always moving. We want players to feel like they are chasing the ball and can get to it. In terms of the physics engine, we have made significant improvements to the handling of the ball and the player itself. The ball will behave more intelligently in mid-air, landing on the ground differently from how it did before. The player is also more responsive in the air. For example, it will bend when colliding with a player or defender.

When a player tackles, he can see what direction the ball has gone off and has the opportunity to strike a clean tackle. 'HyperMotion' also allows us to capture more behaviours that are critical in the game of football. For example, during a tackle we can show exactly how the player lunges at the ball. The player can control the speed of the tackle, for example, which also leads to better representation of

It lets you learn from coaches, scouts and trainers, develop personal stats and compete in a traditional football game of passing and shooting. It's a fun and rewarding way to develop your footballing skills and perfect each player's footballing attributes.
