When working on our client's Oracle 11g database, I stumbled upon a strange behaviour. When I am looping through a query and find any row that I want to update, I am performing an UPDATE.. with the new value. However, while updating, I noticed that the number used in the UPDATE-parameters is always one number less than it should be. It happens on the new column (which is just a number) and also on an update with another column. Here is the strange behaviour: update t1 set col1 = 1 Works update t1 set col1 = 2 Works update t1 set col1 = 3 Works update t1 set col1 = 4 Here I am expecting that the 3rd update will fail, but instead it works and the new value for col1 is saved for the next iteration of the loop. update t1 set col1 = 1 + [[V$CURSOR]] Works update t1 set col1 = 2 + [[V$CURSOR]] Works update t1 set col1 = 3 + [[V$CURSOR]] Works update t1 set col

Windows.10.18362.KMS.Torrent.Group.rarUC Riverside student wins first place in global science fair An international competition was won by a UC Riverside student who created a sensor that identifies deep-sea ocean life. Dusty Leighton, 18, is the first-place winner of the 2018 International Science and Engineering Fair, or ISEF, held in Irvine over the weekend. Leighton's underwater ocean life detection sensor measures ocean currents and vibrations. It can track these minute changes of the ocean floor that indicate the presence of ocean life in the deep ocean. "My uncle is a geophysicist who has been studying ocean currents for decades," Leighton said. "I wanted to develop an instrument to measure the tiny fluctuations of the seafloor, since these fluctuations are what we use to locate ocean life." Leighton's sensor incorporates a microaccelerometer, also known as an accelerometer, which measures the slight movements caused by ocean currents. "An accelerometer is typically about the size of a large coin," said Leighton, who was a senior at UCR when he won. "But I built my device in order to fit on the tip of a fishing line." He won first place in the ISEF competition for his sensor that allows researchers to identify animal life in the deep-sea ocean, which are creatures far below the surface of the water that have not yet been discovered and described in scientific literature. Leighton's study also demonstrates the growing potential of international research programs that incentivize post-secondary students to participate in such competitions, said Robin Cook, a UCR associate professor and director of the university's science fair, and a consultant to the fair for several years. "This was a study that was no more than two or three years ago that had not been done before," Cook said. "It turned out to be an important factor." Her statement is in reference to a study conducted by UCR marine biologist Nuno Valente, who has been involved with the science fair for a number of years. Valente's study looked at sperm whale behavioral changes off the coast of Montevideo, Uruguay, in the early 2000s that indicated the whales were swimming off the coast of marine debris. The change in whales' behavior led to the discovery of d0c515b9f4
