Bankruptcy: The Basics By Jessica

Winkel In this series, we're going to look at the basics of bankruptcy, starting with definitions and then moving on to talk about different types of bankruptcy, the process, what happens in the case, and the benefits of filing for bankruptcy. Who Filed Bankruptcy? "Bankruptcy is becoming more and more common. In fact, more than 10 million people were seeking Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 bankruptcy in 2013." So said a report from the 2015 edition of the American Bankruptcy Institute's Annual Survey of Bankruptcy Filings. This report says that these numbers are up from the year before. This means that more and more people are reaching out to attorneys and filing for bankruptcy. If you think you might need to file for bankruptcy, or if you're considering filing, the American Bankruptcy Institute's website has information for you to read. This also tells us that there's an increase in the number of bankruptcy filings. This is good news for those who need the services of an attorney to help them through the process. Definitions When people say that bankruptcy is becoming more popular, I think that it's because there are more laws, more people, and more information available. Bankruptcy laws have changed, and people have more information available at their fingertips. This has led to more people filing for bankruptcy. But if you want to file, you have to understand the law, so we'll talk about the law and talk about how different types of bankruptcy work in a minute. Bankruptcy is a federal law. It has the Federal Bankruptcy Code as its source of power. But even with the Code, you have to understand the law if you are going to file for bankruptcy, and the definitions section of the Code can help you with that. The first question is, "What is a bankruptcy?" According to the Code, bankruptcy is the "filing of a bankruptcy petition by an individual under the Bankruptcy Code." In case this is not clear to you, let's break it down:

“Bankruptcy” is a legal term that means a whole lot of things. These days, we tend to think of it as the whole process of filing your taxes. But bankruptcy is more than filing

What's New In?

Q: Rails: where to put initializers when in an engine I'm writing an engine. It has some initializers, so they're in the directory

`/app/engines/myengine/config/initializers.`

I want to put the engine's initializers in the engine's directory, but how do I do that? If I do this... # app/config/initializers/base_params.rb BaseEngine.load_initializer("/app/engines/m yengine/config/initializers/base_params")

...and do a config.generate(:base) in an initializer like this... # app/engines/myeng ine/config/initializers/base_params.rb BaseEngine.configure_schema do lschema schema.timestamps end ...I get this... undefined method 'configure_schema' for # A: I solved this by just creating a rails initializer that copies in the engines initializers... # lib/engines.rb module Engines module Plagiarism include FileSystemEngine protected def prepare_initializers Engine. config.find_or_create_application.send(:i nclude, Plagiarism::Engine) end end end # engines/plagiarism/config/initializers/base _params.rb BaseEngine.load_initializer("/ app/engines/plagiarism/config/initializers/

base_params") # lib/engines.rb module Engines module Plagiarism include Plagiarism::Engine end end You can load the base_params initializer when you load the plagiarism engine, and the plagiarism engine will include the initializers in the base_params initializer...
I'm not sure if it's a best practice, but it worked for me. Q: Write To Input Stream
