Examples of such routing protocols include both those that are non-tree based and those that are tree based. Non-tree based routing protocols are useful in local area networks, but not in the Internet. Examples of non-tree based routing protocols include, but are not limited to Ad Hoc On Demand Distance Vector (AODV) and Dynamic Source Routing (DSR), which are described in more detail in the Request for Comment (RFC) documents RFC 1149 (DSR); and RFC 3775 (AODV). More recently, Internet Protocol version 6 (IPv6) has been adopted by many large corporations in an effort to increase the capability of Internet devices to enable them to utilize the IP protocol suite. Unfortunately, IPv6 deployment has not been as smooth as expected, and many Internet devices still operate with an IPv4 addressing scheme. This means that even in an IPv6 network, routing still needs to be performed to transfer messages between Internet devices on the Internet. The Internet Assigned Numbers Authority (IANA) has elected to use the Next Hop Resolution Protocol (NHRP) to support routing in IPv6. One of the advantages of using NHRP is that it does not require the deployment of state-based routing protocols, such as RIP, OSPF, IS-IS and BGP. However, NHRP is a stateless routing protocol. This means that NHRP cannot be used to track changes in the Internet topology as a result of changes in Internet 595f342e71
