Trisomy 21 and 22q11.2 deletion syndrome While the pathological evidence for potential involvement of mitochondria in Parkinson's disease is now widely accepted, the functional link between Parkinson's disease and mitochondrial dysfunction remains unclear. The evidence that the disease is caused by mitochondrial dysfunction in a large proportion of cases [pgen.1004270-Benedetti1], [pgen.1004270-Lill1] may suggest that the association of Parkinson's disease with mitochondrial dysfunction is caused by a common defect in mitochondrial function or biogenesis, or by a defect in the regulation of the response to increased cellular oxidative stress. It is interesting to note that both Parkinson's disease and mitochondrial dysfunction are genetically heterogeneous. It has been speculated that the causative mitochondrial mutations should be found within this range of 'grey zone' [pgen.1004270-VanLaar1]. Among others, mutations in the GTP-cyclohydrolase I (GCH1) gene have been found in patients with trisomy 21 and chromosome 22q11.2 deletion syndrome, and in one patient with Parkinson's disease [pgen.1004270-Lee1]-[pgen.1004270-Saving1]. GCH1 is the first and rate-limiting step of tetrahydrobiopterin production, a cofactor of the aromatic l-amino acid decarboxylase that is important for the synthesis of the neurotransmitters dopamine and serotonin. Together with the de novo nonsense mutation in the parkin gene, patients with parkinsonism present with a combined parkinsonism-dystonia phenotype. In addition, GCH1 can modulate the response to oxidative stress by a feedback mechanism in which biopterin limits the generation of oxidizing free radicals [pgen.1004270-Salvatore1], and deletion of this gene causes accumulation of the oxidizing free radical nitric oxide [pgen.1004270-Staples1]. Further studies of the genetic underpinnings of Parkinson's disease have recently shown that polymorphisms in GCH1 have a genetic influence on the disease [pgen.1004270-Roze1]. The genetic association between Parkinson'

Differential effects of chronic coarctation of the aorta on energy expenditure, leptin, ghrelin, and adiponectin levels in the carotid body of adult male guinea pigs. Obesity is closely related to the risk of cardiovascular diseases and hypertension. Carotid body (CB) obesity is an early sign of cardiovascular diseases. However, little is known about the causal association of CB obesity and hypertension. The authors examined the relationship between CB hypertrophy and hypertension in the adult guinea pig model of coarctation of the aorta (CoA). Male guinea pigs received a sham operation or CoA induction surgery (1.8+/-0.2 mm) at 3 weeks of age. Four weeks after surgery, the animals were examined. Systolic blood pressure (BP) was significantly higher in the CoA group than in the sham group at 4 weeks of age (PQ: Best way to consume wcf service with html5 What is the best way to consume wcf service with html5?
