The application of this technology will open up new ways of how football is played. Players will be able to alter their speed, acceleration, leap, weight transfer, balance and even their direction of movement. These elements will be monitored and measured during a game and will help players control their speed and change direction on the pitch, in both attack and defence. This is how FIFA 22 will experience changing weather conditions: 1 - Fahrenheit TEMPEST 2 - Celcius TEMPEST 3 - FAN TEMPEST The pitch will be a complex mix of grass, sand, snow, mud, water, and ice, all of which will affect the pitch surface. Pitches will include real-life field dimensions and surface details will vary in real time. Based on the feedback that FIFA 21 received during its launch, EA SPORTS asked a panel of world-renowned arborist and horticulturist professionals for their input on the process of installing realistic pitch tiles. SPORTS asked a panel of world-renowned arborist and horticulturist professionals for their input on the process of installing realistic pitch tiles. We know how much of an impact real, seasonal changes in the weather and conditions can have on the field of play. We want to take FIFA into that world, as we did with FIFA 20. The objective of the research and development process was to capture the actual pitch surface dimension and terrain of different countries around the world, from Northern Europe to South America. This data is used to simulate the movement of the ball across the pitch and is meticulously recreated by our artists in the most detail, using the gameplay engine in FIFA. Our research also uncovered patterns in the pitch change throughout the year. The grass covering will grow and disappear at different times of the year depending on the weather conditions. We also looked at the actual shade cast by overhead trees in a specific region, and the amount of sunlight that reaches the pitch during a specific time of the day. Players will experience weather changes including: Rain and snow on the pitch. Players will feel the rainfall and snow and for each impact on the pitch the ball will become affected. . Q: Add a class to a tag if a class is present on a sibling element I'm trying to add a class to a tag if the class is present on a sibling element, not the parent element. Here's the current jQuery I'm using. `$('#' + this.id).children().each(function () { $(this).addClass('current'); });` If I do this... `$('#' + this.id).children`
