With its aim to unify the Polish web and the internet and to promote Polish web 2.0 and 2.1 technologies, a new open source project - Netania - will start functioning soon. Initially, Netania's core will be the new Netania portal - a hosting, software-development, social-networking and open-content technology platform which will have all the core functionality. The site will offer a hosting platform and a social networking service. In addition to this, the site will have a forum where interesting and creative projects and ideas can be discussed. The portal will be at www.netania.org. What the site will offer is an attractive place to showcase projects, news and technology-related discussions. As for the software development, the Netania portal will be integrated with a software development tool - Rapid Application Development for Polish Free Software - accessible only to registered participants. The portal will also offer a set of application components - "Application Creators". These modules will allow developers to build their applications from scratch. The portal will be using existing technologies - among others, PHP, MySQL, XHTML and JavaScript. Open source technologies like XUL, GTK or Java are also to be used. However, with enough support from the developer community, the portal can also use proprietary solutions - which is why the portal can also be entirely developed in C+-. What is Netania? Is it a portal? A social networking service? What are the technologies used in Netania? And the advantages? Netania is a new open-source portal and software developer. It will host a portal and social networking service. It will offer a suite of applications that will allow for easy software development for projects based on the portal's infrastructure, especially in the areas of communication (messaging), content publishing and collaboration.
