future. The Climate Portal is a powerful new tool for the better use of weather information for meteorologists and their clients. But WMO alone cannot manage weather observations - it needs the support of partners. In this way, the World

Meteorological Organisation and HDFC Bank are working together to enhance observation services at a large-scale level.” S.B. Thapa, CEO, HDFC Bank, says, “We believe that collaboration with the world’s leading climate scientists, meteorologists and climatologists will help provide the tools and technical know-how to improve forecasting and prediction capabilities. We hope that the new platform will transform the weather information used for making informed decisions that will change the lives of people in India and around the world.” The World Meteorological Organization is an intergovernmental organisation of 190 member countries with its headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. The WMO provides the global community with services and information relating to weather and climate. HDFC Bank's Climate Portal offers climate services to customers and the public such as: climate research, analyses and forecasts; providing the global community with historic and best quality weather information; and providing daily, weekly, monthly and seasonal climate forecasts. More than 20,000 sets of daily climate data are
