The technology will be introduced to coaches and players in the United States on April 30, with worldwide roll out set to follow shortly afterwards. Speaking to the media at EA SPORTS™ FIFA 18 Showcase Tour events in the UK and Cologne, Marten Andersson, Creative Director at EA SPORTS, said: "Our goal for every FIFA game has been to be more authentic and the EA SPORTS FIFA team has delivered this goal year on year. But by combining the new technology with a new engine we've been able to bring players more into the game, feel more interactive and create a match flow that is more realistic than ever. We're proud of our work on FIFA and the adoption of this new technology is the next step in the evolution of the game." A visual example of this technology in action can be seen during this FIFA18 stadium tour footage. Andersson continued: "No technology can ever be entirely perfect, but we're confident that our world-class team has delivered a technology that will help make this the best football game on the planet. "FIFA players will be able to enjoy far more football in FIFA and we're also working closely with our community to ensure that this is a technology that is easily understood, adopted and used by players. In FIFA 18 we've created the most realistic artificial intelligence in the history of the series and also included the widest variety of emotions ever in any FIFA title. And this year we've gone one step further: by combining the absolute realism of FIFA 18, with our HyperMotion technology, we're truly excited about what we're seeing ahead and are proud to be one of the most authentic and believable football games ever created." Why did we choose to build this game for next generation platforms? Arno Wallner, Executive Producer on FIFA on next generation platforms: "We have been able to leverage our proprietary Frostbite™ engine to take players, coaches and real players into the game in ways that have never before been possible. The Frostbite engine powers every game that we develop and delivers realistic graphics, authenticity and global accessibility to games. "Our goal with next generation systems is to allow us to take FIFA to a new level in terms of gameplay and realism. We are excited to bring the accuracy of next generation systems to the
