2201 (meaning Cosmos 2201) was a Soviet satellite which was launched in 1978 as part of the Dnepropetrovsk Sputnik programme. It was a spacecraft, which was built by the Yuzhnoye Design Bureau, and was used as a radar calibration target for anti-ballistic missile tests. Launch Kosmos 2201 was launched from Site 133/1 at the Plesetsk Cosmodrome, on a Kosmos-2I 63S1 carrier rocket. The launch took place at 12:10 UTC on 15 March 1978. The launch occurred at an inclination of 51.6 orbit, and a launch azimuth of 190.8. The decanter upper stage was used to perform the two first stages of the launch, before the radar calibration satellite was deployed. The launch successfully placed the satellite into a transfer orbit. It was the only Zond mission in 1978 to launch on a Kosmos-2I 63S1 carrier rocket. The orbital parameters at launch were: The satellite was deployed into a medium Earth orbit. This was successfully confirmed on 23 March 1978 by radar observations.

On 1 April 1978, Kosmos 2201 was visited by a Recovery Progress cargo ship. On 7 April 1978, the satellite was moved into a low Earth orbit. Kosmos 2201 remained in orbit until it decayed and reentered the atmosphere on 14 May 1978. Facile synthesis of 3D hierarchical porous carbons with high capacity, fast adsorption kinetics, good recyclability and strong corrosion resistance. Herein, a facile and sustainable approach towards 3D hierarchical porous carbons (HP-C) was presented. The HP-C were synthesized by in situ pyrolysis of biomass-derived starch/carbon black (SB) under inert atmosphere for the first time. In addition, SB was adopted as both carbon sources and carbon precursors. The as-prepared HP-C had great capacity and excellent adsorption performance with the high specific surface areas (up to 3808 m² g⁻¹).
