Artificially intelligent algorithms use the data to create realistic animation and behavior when a player is in play. They combine information from dozens of cameras strategically placed around the stadium, matching player actions with realistic models to produce player animations and behaviors that match real-life footage. Smart AI also applies the same knowledge to the pitch to optimize gameplay. The pitch has a depth-of-field that encodes goals, corners and penalty areas, which makes them appear like real artifacts in the world. Players will react naturally to these markings, as well as natural grass and other wrinkles in the dirt. In the middle of the field, a series of jump trajectories are programmed to represent the flight paths of shot attempts, to help the ball move into better shooting positions. The engine also understands the game and distributes a variety of pitches and conditions to all players throughout the world. Players will get a range of game styles from different surface and weather conditions, including GAA pitches, grassy plains, mud and snow, regardless of region or climate. To keep pace with the data collection and analysis required to put all of this power in the game, the new engine is more than 50 times faster than the one used for last year's game. There's no way to compare speeds of previous titles, but FIFA is the fastest football video game on the market. What's New? Gameplay FIFA 22 brings you an all-new engine. Almost 50 times faster than the previous iteration of the game, this new engine makes FIFA a much more dynamic experience. It keeps pace with your gameplay performance and will adjust automatically as you move from the center of the field to the sidelines, with no micro-management required. The game's new artificial intelligence has been redesigned from the ground up, using thousands of motion capture clips and player actions to help players make intelligent decisions at all times. As you move around the pitch, you'll notice that your opponents have made crucial, intelligent decisions based on your movement. For example, if you have the ball and are heading towards goal, a defender will run to the other side of the field. Besides making intelligent decision-making a lot more fluid and realistic, this new engine also allows for easier control and balance when in motion. Whether you're sprinting or passing the ball, things are much smoother and more responsive, with fewer missed touches. Players also have greater reaction speed,
