Released by shrek(2001 2011) Watch it (2017) Full Movie in HD 720p/1080p.Q: Conditions of template specialization I have a List structure which takes care of heap manipulation and also manages a pair of counters, which must outlive the List. A simplified, minimal example of such a List class is template class List { public: List(); List(const T& t); List(const List& list); void push(T& t); void push(const T& t); T pop() noexcept; void pushBack(const T& t) noexcept; T& back() noexcept; const T& back() const noexcept; private: struct Node { T* t; Node* next; Node(const T& t, Node* next) noexcept : t(t), next(next) { } }; Node* head; mutable size_t headIndex; }; My problem is that I would like to specialize the Node for List. This obviously means that my non-specialized version of Node does not match the template arguments. I could fix this by deleting the noexcept condition: template class List { public: List(); List(const T& t); List(const List& list); void push(T& t); void push(const T& t); T pop() noexcept; void pushBack(const T& t) noexcept; T& back() noexcept; const T& back() const noexcept; private: struct Node {
