I'm a product of the VB6 era, and most recently have been a Java developer (both on the server side and the client side). So when I heard about iManage (I was excited by the idea of an intuitive monitoring app for BI. So after poring over the sample app, I downloaded the latest version, installed it and started using it (yes, I'm that lazy). Monday, July 20, 2009 If you've been following my Twitter feed recently, you'll know that I've been trying out the new version of OpenNMS (I've really been digging it so far, and I've really been enjoying reading through all of the info on I'm one of those rare people for whom version numbers are important and I really couldn't stick with v0.0.4 for so long. So I'm trying out v0.2.0 - and it's been a killer app so far. So far I've confirmed that my old data has been migrated correctly. I've upgraded from SunOS5.x to Solaris10.x, changed my database connection string, installed oracle and moved my clusters around. Everything has been fine. The workflow was pretty easy - just a couple of imports, a reboot (this takes around 30 minutes), reboot again (hopefully this will take around 5 minutes), copy the config files to
