This invention relates generally to the production of enantiopure (RR) and (SS) isomers of beta-amino alcohols, and to their use in preparing enantiopure beta-amino acids. The (RR) and (SS) isomers of beta-amino alcohols are of considerable commercial value for use as pharmaceutical intermediates, especially for the synthesis of N-sup.alpha.-beta-amino-amides. The methods previously used for the synthesis of enantiopure beta-amino alcohols involve isomerization at the C.sub.2 position of the beta-amino ester, followed by N-alkylation with optically active esters to produce the corresponding enantiomeric beta-amino alcohol (see, for example, Y. Hiyama and M. Sakurai, Chem. Pharm. Bull. 32, 4447 (1984) and H. Koga and H. Sakurai, ibid. 28, 4178 (1980)). The chirality is then conferred on the beta-amino alcohol by a reaction with an optically active ester. More recently, a more general synthesis of enantiopure beta-amino alcohols has been described by L. W. Rosten et al., J. Am. Chem. Soc., 104, 1501 (1982) and K. W. Rhinehart et al., J. Am. Chem. Soc., 103, 7390 (1981). In this general synthesis, aldehyde is converted to a chiral anion which is then treated with an optically active amine. Thus, in the case of the synthesis of L-N.sup.alpha.-hydroxytryptophan, the optically active beta-amino alcohol is first prepared, and the aldehyde is then converted into a chiral carboxylate anion. This anion is then reacted with L-tryptophan. Thus, the overall synthesis proceeds via a chiral beta-amino alcohol intermediate. U.S. patent application Ser. No. 598,735 filed Oct. 11, 1990 describes a process for the synthesis of enantiopure beta-amino alcohols. In the process of that application, isomers of beta-amino esters are produced in a first step. The resulting enantiomerically enriched beta
