For those of us who spend most of our professional lives writing code, it can be very hard to communicate effectively and professionally. Sometimes it also doesn't matter if someone understands our domain subject - it's that we get across the message we are trying to convey. There are many software engineers who will argue that they are not good communicators - sometimes this is true and other times not. In most cases, we learn to communicate during our training days as a professional. Q: How to create enumerated list I am trying to make a simple enumerated list, as follow: `\begin{enumerate} \item a \item b \end{enumerate}` The output I am getting is: But I am expecting something like: Here's my MWE: `\documentclass{article} \usepackage{enumitem} \begin{document} \begin{enumerate} \item a \item b \end{enumerate} \end{document}` How can I make the enumerated list be indented like in the first image? A: No enumeration is not vertically indented by default, because it is left-aligned (just like in case of a definition, itemize or description). If you want to make enumeration right-aligned, you need to add options to enumerate, or `\renewcommand{enumitem}{\documentclass{article} \usepackage{enumitem} \renewcommand{enumerate}[2][{}]{% Default option: left-aligned = "L", align = left \item\ignorespaces#1 \refstepcounter{enumi}% Avoid spurious space before 1st enumeration number \textbf{\theenumi} \obreak\emph{#2}\par% \emph{ } sets the font of #2 in boldface \ignorespaces } \begin{document} \begin{enumerate} \item a \item b \end{enumerate} \end{document}` A new concept for the preparation of novel PAMAM dendrimers with different pore sizes. PAMAM dendrimers are prepared by coupling 6-aminonaphthalene-1,8-disulfonic acid with generation 1-4 PAMAM dendrimers. Preparation was done by applying conjugation agents in different ratios and comparing the resulting dendrimers for their pore size characteristics and morphology by electron microscopy (EM), atomic force microscopy (AFM), and pulsed field gradient (PFG) NMR, before and after functionalization of the dendrimers
