If you want to create a composite image from more than one image, it's best to use a graphics program that's better suited to composing and manipulating artwork. If you want to create professional-looking images quickly, visit www.digital-photography-school.com. ## Creating One Simple Layer To create a simple, single-layer composite image, follow these steps: 1. Using the New File dialog, browse to a photo that you want to use in the composite. 2. Load the photo into Photoshop by using the Open dialog. See the section "Choosing a Photo to Work With" in this chapter. 3. From the Layers panel, select the top layer. To select a layer, click its thumbnail. 4. From the Layer panel, select the Move tool. As shown in Figure 9-5, you can now drag the mouse to resize the layer. 5. Drag the layer downward slightly. Because the two images are scaled to the same proportions, the top one doesn't have room for a layer below it. 6. In the Layers panel, choose Fill from the bottom of the Layers panel menu. The image is completely transparent and visible on top of the image layers. 7. In the Layers panel, double-click the top layer to select it. The layer is highlighted and the New Layer dialog appears, as shown in Figure 9-6. 8. Click OK in the New Layer dialog to create the single composite layer. The composite layer now appears in the Layers panel. The single composite layer, shown in Figure 9-7, allows you to work only with the image's canvas — the ground work of the image's design. Often, composites are created by using a layer mask to outline the composited areas. You also can create a layer mask for single layer composites. Layers masks are discussed in more detail in Chapter 11. FIGURE 9-5: You can drag the composite layer to resize the top image. FIGURE 9-6: In this dialog, you can create the composite layer. FIGURE 9-7: The top layer has been changed to a composite. ## Creating Multiple Layer Composite You can create two-

The present invention relates to data encryption, and more specifically, to managing keys in a secure data storage environment. Data encryption is a process of rendering data unintelligible so that it can be stored, transmitted, or processed without the risk that an unauthorized user can access and use the data. Data encryption is a fundamental technique in modern security systems. With the growing use of the Internet and electronic mail in business and personal communications, an effective data encryption method is needed to prevent unauthorized users from intercepting and copying sensitive information. Secure data storage systems are generally used to secure sensitive data at a remote data storage location. Secure data storage devices are commonly used in modern computing systems to protect sensitive data, such as software programs, customer information, and corporate data that is maintained in data storage devices. In many industries, different cryptographic keys are used to encrypt different types of sensitive data. This invention relates to a probe assembly having a laser diode mounted on a silicon pin of a semiconductor probe card and an optical fiber connected to the rear side of the pin for optical coupling between the silicon pin and the pin of a co-axial cable of a test system. A semiconductor probe card is an integrated circuit device which includes a body of insulating material and semiconductor pins of a conductive material mounted to the top surface of the body of insulating material. The semiconductor probe card is mounted to the die pads of a semiconductor device under test (DUT) and has a plurality of conductive contacts or balls. Each contact is connected to a pin of the probe card. The semiconductor probe card is loaded in a test system. The test system applies test signals to the pins of the probe card and senses signals from the DUT through the pins of the probe card and the contacts of the probe card. The test system then measures the performance of the DUT based on the signal sensed by the probe card. In the probe card, the conductive pin is typically a hollow cylinder made of an insulating material with a central aperture that is filled with conductive material to form a conductive protrusion (e.g., a ball). The pin may also be a hollow cylinder made of a conductive material and filled with an insulating material. The DUT may be a large scale integration (LSI) device that is being tested using automatic test equipment (ATE). Automatic test equipment is a machine that automatically tests a large volume of DUTs. Automatic test equipment is made by companies such as Terady
