Q: Why do monsters use "turtle" attacks? I have noticed that most of the monsters, especially the ones that need to be stunned with some sort of AoE attack use the "turtle" attack (most often targets the body rather than the head) and I just wanted to know what is the reasoning behind this. I have noticed that it appears to be a relatively common technique among most common creatures so I just wanted to know what is it used for and if it has any significant drawbacks. A: Mechanism: Apply Stun Destruction:

Turtle Attack does not deal any damage, but it does disable attacks for up to 1 second; it can be dispelled with a dispel magic. Play style: Some common ways this is used: Cluster of Clones: Just as the name implies, the enemy creates a lot of clones that move around the arena. This is used as a "hurry up" tactic to do damage at the last second in a dangerous situation. Calm: This is the most common application of turtle for beginners. It is a very useful attack to slow down the enemy movement, so that you can deal with him with a series of attacks without having to flee. Protect: This often works best as the next-to-last move when you are low on damage in a boss fight. If you are able to keep up the attacks, you can keep the boss low with this technique. Pick Off: You want to keep just one target. This is usually a melee attack, but in a tight situation, even a ranged attack can be used. Tranquil: This is another turtle of mine. This time, it is used to slow the movement of a target.

You can use this to move around a spot where you want to backstab with ease. A: Turtle attack is a good way of applying pain/stun. This method is sometimes useful to protect oneself from a melee attack. For example, if you use dodge, then the enemy can still hit you in all the places you use dodge in, but if you use turtle, then it will only hit once. It can also help in a 2 person team fight, so the enemy doesnt hit you if one of you turtle's the enemy. Saturday, July 26, 2012 12:50 Well, it's been fun
