If it has a 'selected' attribute then add a class called 'selected', which I want to change the 'src' property to a different image (I'm using some code that has already written this part, so I'm not worried about that). If it doesn't have a 'selected' attribute, then do nothing. My attempt so far: `$(tr[selected]).each(function() { var a = $(this).attr('selected'); if(a == "1") { $(this).addClass('selected'); } });` A: You're close but you don't need that.each() loop, you can just use a single selector: `$(tr[selected]).addClass('selected');`
Demo: New Mexico State reports that N.M. State Police have arrested Brandon A. Flom, 22, and charged him with "five counts of sexual exploitation of a minor - under 13 years of age." He is the son of notorious State Police Puppy Trainer Chip Flom. The illegal child sex images were found on Flom's computer and he was arrested in Milan, Michigan on March 24th, 2016, and he was extradited to the Las Cruces, New Mexico area in April.HMS Woolwich (1776) HMS Woolwich was a 74-gun third rate ship of the line of the Royal Navy, launched on 27 November 1776 at Woolwich Dockyard. She went on to serve for just under five years, and was sold out of the navy in March 1781.
