Three-dimensional structure of the cofactor-binding domain of Escherichia coli DNA-directed RNA polymerase. The DNA-directed RNA polymerase from Escherichia coli contains a cofactor-binding region that binds divalent metal ions in a cooperative fashion, inducing a conformational change in the enzyme. We have obtained a crystal structure of the cofactor-binding domain from the protein backbone to 2.7 A resolution, and modeled the metal-binding site. The fold of the cofactor-binding domain is similar to that of the metal-binding domains of other transcription factors, yet there are several notable differences. One of these is that the cofactor-binding region in the polymerase is a single domain, rather than a two-domain structure as in transcription factor IIA and similar components. The bound divalent metals are coordinated by cysteine and histidine residues and by backbone carbonyl groups. Structural comparisons with transcription factor IIA suggest a mechanism by which a divalent metal could be channeled to the active center of the enzyme. * * For the full copyright and license information, please view the LICENSE * file that was distributed with this source code. */ \Symfony\Component\Translation\PluralizationRules::set(function ($rule) { return 'one'; }, function ($rule) { return 'other'; }); Q: C++ templates: compile-time optimization fails with templates templates Here is a small example of compilation issue. The code demonstrates that when you apply template template specialization the application will fail on 5.7, but succeed with older compilers. #include using namespace std; template typename U > struct tmpl_test; template typename U > struct tmpl_test > {}; struct tmpl_test_1 {}; int main() { tmpl_test_1 > x1; tmpl_test_1

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.3.1)?

Lion vs. Lion When I first saw the site for this issue's Photo of the Week, I could not help but think of the movie The Lion King. As Mufasa is characterizing his rule, the image evokes images of animals all in their glorious splendor: the lioness, the leopard, the elephant and the giraffe. The scene is particularly apt in that, unlike The Lion King (which I haven't seen), the political and military struggle in the area is a serious issue. For those who are interested, the issues are as follows: "hunger and drought have caused dozens of lions to die at the hands of humans and poachers in the past 10 years." "Most of Kenya's wildlife, including lions, was wiped out in part due to years of civil strife and the displacement of hundreds of thousands of people." However, the situation is looking up, with more lions surviving than those who perished before (and the number of lions in the area has increased from about 5,000 to about 15,000–according to the same link). To that end, I was delighted to read about Michut Miaroha's project to educate children about the importance of preserving lion species. I also agree with the photographers who believe that these lions deserve the respect and admiration of humans. Their work and images deserve to be shown and shared. Whether you are an avid viewer or just an occasional viewer, enjoy and share the images! I have also included a link to The Lulu Project, which encourages conservation while promoting the rights of humans and wildlife in their symbiotic relationship. The Lion vs. Lion seeks justice for the animals in Africa. Photo of the week: a lion in Hwange, Mpumalanga.Q: How to get this tooltip/popup to show? I'm trying to make a simple tooltip/popup to show in a line on the canvas and I'm having some trouble. I am trying to do this as simply as possible, but in the process I'm realizing that there's probably a more efficient way to do it than I'm currently thinking. Anyway, here is the code I have so far (using jQuery): HTML: Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet
