Note For more on learning to edit photos, check out Professional Photo Editing For Dummies, written by our friend and author Michael Freeman (Wiley). ## Watching Windows Live Movie Maker Windows Live Movie Maker is designed to turn your computer into your own personal movie-editing lab. It's a perfect tool for creating simple home movies, as well as for organizing and editing your digital photos. The best part is, the program is free. You don't even need a disc—it's like the world's most convenient video camera. If you're a Windows user, you've probably used Windows Movie Maker. It's a familiar tool, and many people are quite comfortable using it. Movie Maker is easy to use, and the results are impressive for a free product. Movie Maker also exports your photos as video file formats in addition to the old-fashioned JPG files. That means you can use Movie Maker to create a video from your vacation photos, a slideshow from the latest photo event you had, or a short trailer for a new movie you're producing. Your computer has the software already. So, all you need to do is open the program and start creating. Movie Maker makes it a snap for you to make movies with great effects. For example, you can create a fancy animated title screen, a fade-in/fade-out screen, or a DVD menu, as shown in Figure 15-1, making it a worthy and flexible alternative to those lengthy 1-hour editing sessions from the software store. You can even add music and sounds to your movies. But you probably won't do that—we'd hate to hear a Walther Glock 19 going off at the end of Keeper of same to prove [a defendant's] guilt to a degree inordinately high by itself." Id. (quoting Johnson v. United States, 520 U.S. 461, 470-71 (1997) (stating that there must be "something more" than a minimum quantum of evidence to satisfy the "more than de minimis" test for plain error)); see State v. Bartlett, 232 N.C. App. 581, 591-93, 745 S.E.2d 787, 794-96 (2013). Here, the only evidence that defendant had a weapon was his statement to the officers, but there was no evidence that the weapon was dangerous or that it was operable. The officers did not testify that defendant's initial words were "I'm going to kill you." See State v. Orr, 290 N.C. 315, 316, 226 S.E.2d 174, 175 (1976) (stating that the jury should not convict a person based on "his preliminary utterances"). At most, the officers testified that defendant's initial remarks included words which they interpreted to be a threat to kill Officer Risner. The officers also testified that defendant threw away the wallet on their approach. However, if defendant were found guilty of making a threat to kill, he must have made it as an act of imminent violence, not the mere thought of imminent violence. See N.C. Gen. Stat. § 14-277.6(a). Therefore, it was the state's -8- STATE V. WILLIAMS Opinion of
