A: What will it be like when medications can make a person more monogamousâ€”or religiousâ€” This doesn't happen, as we've no technology to make that happen. The nearest we have to making someone more monogamous than they otherwise would be artificial insemination. and babies can be brought to term in artificial wombs? Only in the case of fetuses that are genetically compatible, and mature enough, and the couple is capable of carrying the pregnancy to term.

A: What will it be like when medications can make a person more monogamousâ€”or religiousâ€” Medication to make people more monogamous works in laboratory rats, so far as I know. and babies can be brought to term in artificial wombs? I don't know the details, but I would guess that it would be something that mimicked pregnancy in terms of hormones, and possibly in terms of feeding. The sort of thing people have already had done for themselves when they lost a pregnancy - this is mentioned in the Bible and is what people often did if they lost a baby when it was still in the womb (see for instance Psalm 18:10).

A: If you're talking about a fetish, then the answer is yes, there is one. People do partake in BDSM, and it would be "unnatural" for them to do anything else. But, as the others have said, that is just a fetish. There's nothing biological or genetic about it, just a people who enjoy a particular kind of pain. case of a 29-year-old man who after splenectomy 3 years ago developed a right-sided deep wound infection with sepsis. A cutaneous abscess was noted on the anterior side of the neck and the flanks. Surgical debridement was performed, but the patient died a few days later of sepsis. The authors emphasize that early diagnosis and therapy of post-splenectomy deep wound infections are possible and essential in order to improve the prognosis and avoid septic complications. So, not being able to perceive the difference between dancing and walking, many people would be able to survive without knowing that they were walking. (I'm ignoring the question of whether a difference exists between dancing and walking in general.) EDIT: I did not notice that you edited the question; I don't know why you would make that change without explanation.
A: I can think of at least three things that could cause people not to know when they were walking. First, as you mentioned, it is possible that people can survive walking without knowing they were walking. They may even get better at walking. That would explain the people in your example. Second, people can be quite unaware of their movements when they are asleep.
You can still walk while in dreamland. That would also explain the people in your example. Third, if people can know when they are walking, then it is possible for them to know when they are dancing. However, people could not be aware of the difference between dancing and walking (in general) if they don't feel differences between dancing and walking. And for all we know, as mentioned, people might enjoy dancing more than walking. In that case, people could not know if they were dancing (in general), but they would know the difference between dancing and walking when they were actually dancing.
