â€;Reaching the Unreached: The Question of Translation At an AFLA National Conference this past December I attended a panel on the topic of participation. Moderated by Debbie Pearce-Moloney, the panel featured speakers from the Canadian Anglican Churches and the Philippines. Panelists were asked to share what they understood to be the challenges and opportunities for translators. I found it hard to keep the group in my head, but three students caught my attention. From Canada, Ron Anderson, our team supervisor for the Anglican World Mission project, had a unique perspective for two reasons. He is a native of the Philippines and his wife is a native of the Philippines. Both had been raised in Canadian homes, schools, and communities, but would continue to find themselves in the role of outsider. I will never forget the afternoon that Ron made it his business to take me to a barbeque that a friend of ours from the Philippines was hosting. He
