Small lightweight tool that is also portable UnblockSummary: I've started a few threads and am wondering how many people have gone through this. A little background: I am in my mid 20's, and have been having occasional issues with vision since I was in highschool. I am now in my 3rd year of grad school and have been seeing an optometrist for 4 months. All the eye tests have been fine and both eyes are 20/20 with a couple of small bumps (I'm assuming my glasses are too thick), but in the past 2 months, even with bifocals, I can barely read books or the giant blackboard at my school. I can see my sightlines but cannot find the little letters at the bottom of pages, etc. I had a test that showed my eyes to be covered in "patches" and the doctor suggested that I read with a magnifying glass. With that suggestion I had a very good reading time with the magnifying glass! I'm confused about my current situation. I can see my eyes, I have no problems with my eyes' depth of field, there is no age related problems with my eyes, my pupils light up at the right size, I can read my sightlines, yet I cannot see the letters at the bottom of pages. I know there is nothing physically wrong with my eyes. I have only recently been able to see the bottoms of pages clearly (after being able to see the top of pages for the past 2 months). Any ideas? Questions: 1) What are those patches that are covering my eyes? 2) I've never been able to wear bifocals for any length of time. What are they going to recommend? 3) What is different about how my brain processes my eyesight than it did before?

If you're reading this after the Kickstarter has ended, come check out the rest of the warbands and the 15 other Mgos.

Kickstarter backers - you'll have until October 30 to get your warband orders in. Email us at support@pwgames.com and we'll get right on it. Looking at the Word of God, (1) it's plenty of time to "justify" its existence, and (2) there's enough time for folks to plan how they want their warband to function and interact. The game is based on the top-down and cover mechanics from Flames of War. So, in essence, the way to play it is very similar to Infinity, except you're using an alternative model.

Nuff said! The list of mounts has been updated to say that it's up to the player (hence the "+1" - which is the official number of ability points to spend in order to select that mount). Some people like the idea of the one point per army, and others want more. Now, a test list has been posted to see how the modifiers are working. Feel free to try out the new mount choices, and let us know if you see anything that isn't working the way you'd expected it to!

Q: Using Jest to test React components against a webpack bundle I'm trying to use Jest to test some components against webpack bundles for a React application. However, it seems that the content of the bundle is not loaded before testing starts. The test module is like so: `import React from 'react'; import { mount } from 'enzyme'; import warning from 'warning'; import Loading from './Loading'; const renderLoading = (props) => warning(() b7e8fdf5c8`
